Crim Will Set Aside.

Seattle, July 9—Judge King Dykeman in the superior court today set aside the will of Leslie Crim, a rich Alaskan, who left an estate said to be valued at $200,000 in the case of Thomas H. Gourley on his death, June 18, 1911.

Gourley, appointed as sole executor and trustee, was the leader of the so-called "holy roller" sect formerly quartered at Ballard Beach, and heirs charged that he used undue influence on Crim, persuading him to make out a will in his favor when Crim was of unsound and irrational mind. Crim died in the holy roller colony at Islanddale, San Juan county, and left his estate to Gourley to be used for the "deserving poor."

The case went before the supreme court of the state on appeal and was returned to Judge Dykeman's court last May, when he took the case under advisement. His decision means that the property, which consists of 201,600 shares of capital stock of the Lost River Tin Mine Company of Alaska, will ultimately go to the heirs of Crim.
